

Bluffing in Poker

Contributed by Administrator
Monday, 28 January 2008

Poker bluffing is an inseparable skill in poker card games. In fact skillful bluffing is a major gateway to many tourneys. Poker bluffing is a kind of polished deception where you display false face and false moves against your intended motives just to get your opponent to behave in the way you want.

Poker bluffing requires the bluffer to have enough information in order to not insensibly apply bluffing principles. Without having any true information about a partial hand status of the opponent you cannot do efficient poker bluffing that can give you the reaction you expect.

Poker bluffing has some factors to be considered like:-

- Do not bluff always
- Bluff in the right place
- Learn to understand if others are bluffing
- There are some places where you should not bluff always.
- Partial bluffing

Partial bluffing helps one to take chances with calling in an aim to improve the hand with drawing or replacement. This kind of a bluffing approach can mean nothing to a player who is left with no real chance to win, but such partial bluffs can work miracles against a strong player who is expecting to win soon to misbelieve that you are aggressive. However, you need to learn in depth about when to do partial bluffing and when not too.

Do not bluff serially; if you have just escaped a couple of bluffs, the players would be expecting you to bluff over again especially when you are playing tough tables. If you have just been trapped by a couple of bluffs from the opponent, the players would be expecting you to bluff over again to repay in some games. You should not bluff when your opponents are expecting that you will bluff. Not bluffing can help at times confusing the opponent to the core.

Skilful poker bluffing requires the application of poker odds. If you have arrived at some sure odds of your opponent your bluff should be more targeted to that particular opponent. Tight and aggressive games coupled with poker bluffing is a great road to victory; however, bluffing in a table of multiple players is more complicating than bluffing with just a single or couple of opponents.

With poker being a mind game, bluffing involved with expression of every move, online poker bluffing is also a requisite to win a game. Poker bluffing is not as easy as it sounds, it requires lots of practice.